

SitSee 3-Day (North Pole)

VACATION. NOT BOOTCAMP.

www.sitseetravel.com

Santa might be real, but this itinerary is not real. We wish it was all real, but it's just a sample of the SitSee format.

The North Pole, its venues, prices, and links displayed here are all imagined by a sneaky, wannabe elf at SitSee Travel.

SitSee Ease Score:

Important Definitions

The SitSee Ease Score

This itinerary displays a SitSee Ease Score, a number between 0-100. The higher the number, the friendlier the destination is for a gently-paced visit.

We score the itinerary using the five factors listed below (1-10, higher is better), and then we total them out of 50 and then double it to arrive at the SitSee Ease Score. This score is not a grade for SitSee Travel. It's a reflection of the destination, how accommodating the place is, and how well we could adapt a travel plan around its realities.

Our goal with this score is to give you a transparent and honest read on how easy it is to get around your destination with stamina or mobility limitations.

- Walking Demand (how little walking)
- Seating Availability
- Transit Accessibility
- Terrain (how flat and smooth)
- Fatigue Friendliness

Why We Love Marriott

We recommend Marriott because they make a SitSee trip easier from the moment you arrive. With more than 30 brands and thousands of hotels worldwide, there is almost always a Marriott right where you want to be, close to the sights, not a tiring commute away. That range lets you travel your way: a budget-friendly Courtyard or Fairfield, a comfortable Westin or Sheraton, or a Ritz-Carlton splurge, each held to the same dependable standard. Most important to us, Marriott takes accessibility seriously, ADA-style rooms, step-free entrances, and staff trained to help, so travelers who need accommodations can book with confidence. Trusted, everywhere, and built for real comfort. Marriott is our preferred recommendation partner; you are always free to choose any hotel that suits you.

For this fictional sample we recommend the (imaginary) North Pole Marriott on Candy Cane Lane, a cozy 4-star lodge steps from Santa's Village and central to all three days. Picture accessible rooms with roll-in showers, grab bars, lowered vanities, and a heated step-free entrance; in a real itinerary you would call the property to confirm the exact accessible room features before booking.

Download These Apps Before You Go

Marriott Bonvoy: hotel booking and management, mobile check-in, and a digital room key where available.

American Airlines: flights, mobile check-in, and boarding passes.

Uber: rides and transfers, including accessible (WAV) vehicles where available.

Viator: tours and experiences.

OpenTable: restaurant reservations.

Aurora Alert: a playful stand-in for a northern-lights forecast app, so you know when to look up.

When to Go: Seasons at a Glance

The North Pole is flat, snowy, and entirely make-believe, which makes it the easiest gently-paced destination we have ever planned. Every venue below is heated, level, and a short ride apart. Use the playful recap below to set expectations (and pack a very warm coat).

Season	Typical Highs / Lows (deg F)	Crowds, Pricing, and Notes
Polar Night (Nov-Jan)	-15 to -30 / -25 to -40	Twenty-four hour darkness and peak aurora. Busiest around Christmas; book early. Pack serious thermals.
Late Winter (Feb-Mar)	-5 to -20 / -15 to -30	Bright snow, calmer crowds, and easy sleigh travel. Great value after the holidays.
Midnight Sun (Apr-Aug)	20 to 35 / 5 to 20	Endless daylight, the softest weather, and the fewest visitors. The most comfortable window for a gently-paced trip.
Freeze-Up (Sep-Oct)	0 to 20 / -10 to 5	The aurora returns and the Workshop ramps up for the season. Pleasant, quiet, and photogenic.

These figures are imaginary. In a real itinerary you would confirm the live forecast on weather.com as your trip approaches.

Before You Go: Entry Essentials

Because the North Pole is fictional, there is no real passport, visa, or currency to arrange, this section simply shows where those details would go. In a real SitSee itinerary you would carry a government-issued photo ID for your flight and hotel check-in. Info accurate as of June 28, 2026.

Getting There

In the spirit of the format, you would fly American Airlines into the (imaginary) North Pole International Airport, a short, flat, heated transfer from Santa's Village. American Airlines offers wheelchair assistance and accessible boarding; in a real trip you would request these services when you book or at least 48 hours before departure. Pre-built prices exclude airfare, since travelers depart from many cities.

Stay Safe and Prepared

Emergency essentials: In this fictional world you would dial the North Pole Elf Patrol; in any real itinerary this is where the local emergency number, nearest hospital, and 24-hour pharmacy would be listed.

Travel insurance: Arrange travel and medical insurance, including any trip protection you want, before departure. This is the traveler's responsibility; SitSee does not provide it.

Getting around: Everything here is flat and a short ride apart. Heated trolleys and accessible sleigh-vans connect every stop; request an accessible (WAV) vehicle when you need one.

Health and weather: It is very cold and the light swings from endless night to endless day; carry warm layers, hand-warmers, and lip balm, and plan plenty of heated indoor time.

Money and staying connected: Cards are accepted everywhere on the Nice List; tipping the elves is customary. Tell your bank you are traveling and download offline maps in case of spotty service near the Pole.

Travelers using a wheelchair or scooter: Confirm accessible transport and any equipment needs in advance, carry medical and disability documentation, and note that accessible sleigh-vans and WAV rides can be requested. Each venue below lists its direct accessibility contact where confirmation is wise.

YOUR SITSEE ITINERARY

Fewer steps, more sitting, more rest, in a place that does not exist but follows every SitSee rule.

The North Pole is flat, heated, and compact, so the icons sit a short, level ride apart. Days are time-boxed, every venue has seating, and we lean on warm trolleys and sleigh-vans so you save your energy for the cookies, the lights, and the reindeer.

SitSee Ease Score (78)

Criterion (10 = most SitSee-friendly)	Score (1-10)
Walking Demand (10 = least walking)	7
Seating Availability	9
Transit Accessibility	7
Terrain Difficulty (10 = flat)	8
Fatigue Friendliness	8
Overall SitSee Ease Score	78

How it is calculated: $(7 + 9 + 7 + 8 + 8) = 39$, times 2 = 78 out of 100. Higher is friendlier.

☒ Pacing Snapshot

Three flat, gentle, entirely heated days. Day 2 pairs the seated reindeer tram and elf workshop with an indoor ice gallery. Day 3 is the lightest, opening with the Toy Vault (your Hidden Gem) before an early dinner and an unhurried departure.

SitSee Travel Confidence Report

This is a fictional sample. The North Pole, Santa's House, Mrs. Claus's cookie class, every venue, address, price, hour, and booking link in this document are imaginary, created only to demonstrate the SitSee itinerary format. Nothing here is bookable. In a real SitSee itinerary, this section certifies how the trip was verified.

Accuracy date: Info accurate as of June 28, 2026. In a real itinerary this is the publish date, and we review and refresh every SitSee itinerary at least once every 12 months. Prices, hours, and access details are estimates verified on that date and can change; confirm directly before you go.

How we verify (real itineraries): Every fact, names, addresses, hours, prices, and accessibility, is traced to a real, documented source at build time. Nothing is written from memory. Anything we cannot confirm is flagged Unverified, confirm directly before you go. (For this sample, every fact is openly invented.)

Accessibility commitment: In a real itinerary, access claims are corroborated against the venue's own accessibility page plus a recognized source such as AccessNow, Wheelmap, or a recent first-hand review. We give specifics, the ramp, the elevator, the restroom, not the bare word accessible, and we flag honestly. This sample shows that voice using imaginary venues.

Quality bar: In a real itinerary we recommend only restaurants and Marriott properties rated 4 stars or above on Google. The North Pole Marriott shown here is fictional.

Corrections: Spot something out of date in a real itinerary? Email info@sitseetravel.com and we will correct it promptly and log it.

Honest caveat: SitSee does not book travel. Confirm details directly with each provider before booking. See the full Disclaimers and Terms below.
